Topics include, but are not limited to, conflict of interest, responsible authorship, policies for handling misconduct, data management, data sharing, and policies involving use of human and animal subjects. These topics are applied and analyzed in various case scenarios.

Prerequisites: None

Learning Objectives:

- Describe the tenets of responsible conduct of research
- Identify role obligations for individual scientists and scientific societies.
- Delineate the scope of scientific misconduct in human, animal, and basic research.

Conduct of the Course

- Format: This course is primarily face-to-face analysis and discussion about the practice of scientific investigations with integrity. Case studies will be analyzed and discussed using assigned readings, guest speakers, webinars, and experiential learning activities.
- Required:
 - Assigned readings and discussions. Students are required to read assigned chapters in provided articles and the course textbook (Macrina, 2014, 4th Edition) as assigned and in preparation for analyzing, discussing case studies.
 - OHRP Interactive video, The Research Clinic <http://ori.hhs.gov/TheResearchClinic>
 - Citi Training, if have not completed <https://www.citiprogram.org/>
 - Paper that will analyze an ethical case scenario, applying learning from text, journal articles, and seminar discussions
